

POOR QUALITY REPRODUCTION
SEE 201 FOLDER FOR ORIGINAL

SECRET

APR 11 1955

Eugen Dollman
Werner
Angelo
+
C-7

MEMORANDUM FOR: Special Assistant, Intelligence
Department of State

SUBJECT: Allegations of SS Colonel Willmann

1. Former SS Colonel Eugen Dollman, who played a part in the negotiations leading to the surrender of the German troops in Northern Italy in the closing stages of World War II, has written a book on his experiences in the immediate post war period. The book is entitled "Der Feige Sold" (The Cowardly Hero, and is scheduled to appear in an Italian version published by LONGHETTI, Milan, in April or May, 1955.

2. An officer of this Agency has read the German manuscript. We feel that you should be aware of one aspect of this book before it appears in Germany or in Italy:

One chapter is partly devoted to an account of a reception given by a "Mr. Alexander" who appears to be the U. S. Ambassador to Italy who was succeeded by Mr. Phillips. Allegedly, "Mr. Alexander" asked the Italian countryside for robust young Italian male peasants who were put into elaborate and skin-tight period costumes to function as lookouts at the affair. According to the author their ranks were rapidly depleted as they disappeared into the upper stories of the mansion with male guests. There is a strong inference that "Mr. Alexander" had homosexual tendencies. Festivities came to an abrupt halt with the arrival of "Mr. Alexander's" successor, Mr. Phillips, with his wife and daughter, when one of the costumed flunkies bowed so low that his trousers split wide open exposing him to such a degree that Miss Phillips fainted. She was allegedly carried out to the "Phillips' automobile by her estranged parents who told "Mr. Alexander" what they thought of his hospitality.

CS DB-33703

FOR THE DEPUTY DIRECTOR, PLANS:

Distribution:

Orig & 1: Addressee
2cc: Signing Official
1cc: RI
1cc: RC
1cc: CI
2cc: JAR

James Angleton

JA:JAR:ch 6 April 1955

SECRET

NAZI WAR CRIMES DISCLOSURE ACT

EXEMPTIONS Section 3(b)

- (2)(A) Privacy ☐
(2)(B) Methods/Sources ☒
(2)(C) Foreign Relations ☐

Declassified and Approved for Release
by the Central Intelligence Agency
Date: 2001 2005

SECRET

To: State
Special Assistant, Intelligence
from JDP

307

1. Former SS Colonel Eugen Dollman, who played a part in the negotiations leading to the surrender of the German troops in Northern Italy in the closing stages of World War II, has written a book on his experiences in the immediate post war period. The book is entitled "Der Feige Held" (The Cowardly Hero) and is scheduled to appear in an Italian version published by LONGANESI, Milan, in April or May, 1955.

2. An officer of this ^{Agency} organization has read the German manuscript. We feel that you should be aware of one aspect of this book before it appears in Germany or in Italy:

One chapter is partly devoted to an account of a reception given by a "Mr. Alexander" who appears to be the U. S. Ambassador to Italy who was succeeded by Mr. Phillips. Allegedly, "Mr. Alexander" combed the Italian countryside for robust young Italian male peasants who were put into elaborate and skin-tight period costumes to function as lackeys at the affair. According to the author their ranks were rapidly depleted as they disappeared into the upper stories of the mansion with male guests. There is a strong inference that "Mr. Alexander" had homosexual tendencies. Festivities came to an abrupt halt with the arrival of "Mr. Alexander's" successor, Mr. Phillips, with his wife and daughter, when one of the costumed flunkies bowed so low that his trousers split wide open exposing him to such a degree that Miss Phillips fainted. She was allegedly carried out to the Phillips' automobile by her outraged parents who told "Mr. Alexander" what they thought of his hospitality.

OS DB-33703

James Angleton, d
Chief, Counterintelligence

SECRET